About the Day

Petite Messe Solennelle—Rossini

Thirty-four years after he had last written an opera, Rossini wrote this life-affirming and not at all petite, nor particularly “solemn” choral mass. Indeed, he called it his last “péchés de vieillesse”, the sins of old age. Scored originally for 12 singers, two pianos and a harmonium, it has now entered the repertoire as a firm favourite of choral societies. Come and spend a day working on this piece with its exuberant choruses and fabulous fugues. Time will be spent on vocal techniques and style, and there will be an informal run-through at the end of the day.

Conductor, Piers Maxim says, “Come and spend a day working on this piece with its exuberant choruses and fabulous fugues. Time will be spent on vocal techniques and style, and there will be an informal run-through at the end of the day.”

The conductor for the day will be Piers Maxim, Director of Music of The Elgar Chorale
